

ABSTRACT

A karabiner comprises a generally C-shaped body, with its free ends curved towards each other and forming a gap therebetween, a gate for closing the gap, and a roller mounted in a recess at one end of the body to act as a runner for ropes and the like.